Preface.

Dobbs County, one of the original counties of North Carolina, was divided into several, among which was Wayne, named in honor of Mad. Anthony Wayne, of Revolutionary fame. The Court-House of Dobbs was situated just beyond the Bizzell Mill, about eleven miles from Goldsboro, on the road to Seven Springs. Not a vestige now remains to mark the spot where justice was dispensed to our forefathers. After the formation of the County of Wayne, Waynesboro, a beautiful village near the banks of the ever-flowing Neuse, was the county-seat—a village of culture, refinement and contentment. In the old Court-House, that stood upon a slight eminence, had been the scene of many able legal debates, when the law was expounded by such great men as Gaston, Henry, Washington, Miller and others, who have left their impress upon memory that has come down to the present. None at that day had the remotest idea that the pleasant homes, in which could be heard laughter and glee and the many social pleasures, would become a deserted village, and that the aspirations, hopes and ambitions of those who looked to the future to fulfill their ideals would become as a tale that is told. The waters of the Neuse still flow, and only the chant of the whippoorwill is heard as a requiem to its faded glory, and the night hawk hoots a refrain as he sits perched in some overhanging tree—a true epitome of many a human life. "All is vanity," saith the wise man Ichabod, is written, and destiny tramples ruthlessly upon human hopes.

About 1838 was the beginning of the great system of internal improvements. The Wilmington and Raleigh Railroad was in building, and was the harbinger of the downfall of Waynesboro and the upbuilding of Goldsboro. The building of the above named railroad was the pioneer of development. This whole section was gradually aroused from its life of ease and comfort. New life was infused, and the calls of duty were broadened and the horizon beckoned to greater exertion. The waters of the Neuse were too uncertain and slow, and the steam car took the place of the steamboat. Soon after the completion of the railroad to Goldsboro (which was named after the chief civil engineer of the railroad), Arnold Borden built a hotel on the square between Walnut and Mulberry streets, fronting the railroad, where lavish hospitality abounded and welcome cheer awaited the traveller, and the building of the hotel was a potent factor in the growth of the town. Mr. Borden soon died, but his widow, a woman of great energy and inestimable worth, took the management, and, with judgment, made a grand success. Notwithstanding the many cares that rested upon her as a hostess, she looked carefully to the rearing of a family of children, and wielded such an influence for good that her descendants are among the most honored and esteemed of Goldsboro to-day. E. B. Borden is the president of the Bank of Wayne, the strongest financial institution of the city. So we will see from the very first Goldsboro, when only a depot, a village, town, and now a city, has ever numbered among its citizens those of sturdy habits and well directed energy.

The location of Goldsboro was well chosen. It is built upon an elevation, with natural drainage on all sides, and the center of a section that, taking Goldsboro as a pivot and draw a circumference of fifty miles, you have a territory that, were it isolated from all the world, would be self-sustaining. Her soil would yield all the necessaries and most of the luxuries that man now enjoys. Wayne was, and it is now, and has ever been a land of husbandry—a life more in accord with Nature than any other, and a life that has ever been attractive. At that time Wayne had many wealthy, intelligent and influential farmers, numbered among whom were the Everetts, Colliers, Lanes, Cobbs, Slocumbs, Smiths, Cooleys, and more, but space will not allow me to mention all. Their homes were full of cheer and comfort and prodigal hospitality was lavished.

Goldsboro always had an attraction for worth and intellect. About 1848 Goldsboro had an ambition to be the capital of Wayne, and an election was called for the removal from Waynesboro, and after a hard fought battle Goldsboro was successful and the palm of victory was placed upon her brow. The Court-House that now stands was built about 1852 on the square fronting Walnut street, amidst a beautiful grove of wide-spreading oaks, and the bar at Goldsboro has ever drawn to her shrine men of great legal ability. W. T. Dortch and George V. Strong were the leaders of the local talent, and well and ably did they weigh every case in the scales of justice. Chicanery never found a place with them, and it is doubtful to the writer of this that W. T. Dortch would entertain a proposition that did not have justice for its basis. He was successful because all his efforts were given for the cause of right and the foundation of truth.

Goldsboro began her life by taking to her bosom such talent as would be lasting. I have already referred to her hotel management and legal talent; and knowing the infirmities that man is liable to be afflicted, there were those who knew the anatomy of man and the skill to apply the needful remedies. There were Dewey, Davis, Moore and others who were worthy disciples of Aesculapius, and did all in human power to alleviate the suffering of their fellow-man.

Thus from a small beginning Goldsboro continued to grow and wax strong, having gathered to herself such elements as would conduce to a strong and healthy existence, and all was good and the future held out hope, when a small cloud arose in the northern horizon, at first not larger than the palm of the hand, soon became dark and threatening, and burst forth in cruel and relentless war. Brother's hand was raised against brother, and the sword was drawn, and was not to be laid down until driven to the hilt. The blood of thousands were poured upon the ground as a libation to appease the wrath of sectional strife. We know not, neither can we prophesy, why such should be. Yet it is so. For four years the cruel conflict raged. Deeds of gallantry and heroism were done on many a hard contested field and many carved their names in blood that will not be erased until time shall be no more. Cruelty and vandalism played their damnable part, and the satellites of the devil in human form held their orgies and delighted in the calamities, and agonies of the good and the pure appealed to their lusts and they gloated over the contamination and ruin they accomplished.

The public is not at rest. The whole country is being awakened to the magnitude of the wrongs that are and have been going on. In New York they are trying to deal with the insurance frauds, and the toga of two Senators have been smirched. Perjury and scandals are being aired in the courts, and the divorce evil has well-nigh contaminated all society. To what ends are we hastening? When will a halt be had? Congress is now in a herculean struggle to hold in check the great railroad corporations. Are the times so portent with peril? Are we entering the path that other republics have trodden?

From 1861 to 1865 was a period of anxiety to Goldsboro, as it was to the whole Southland. None knew the outcome of the struggle. Mothers agonized with grief in the separation of their boys as they gave them, as did the Spartans, to the service of their country, and wives bid their husbands go in a cause that appealed to the patriotism of all. None can imagine the tension upon the heart-cords as their prayers ascended to the Throne of Grace. Goldsboro gave the flower of her young manhood to uphold the cause of the Confederacy, and among the hosts that followed the stars and bars none more bravely faced the foe or did more to achieve success than did the soldiery of Goldsboro. But destiny is unyielding and her edicts are never revoked. But for the cruel hand of fate the flag of the Confederacy would be waving from the capitol of a new republic. The South waged a war for the perpetuation of the principles laid down by their fathers, and freedom shrieked when Appomtattox's field was the scene of surrender. The chivalry of the past and the ideals of greatness drew the togo around and became a part of history. No more will conditions be such as to preserve the beauty of oratory and a patriotism that places country next to God. 'Tis strange, and strange it is true, that where slavery exists are the strongest champions of liberty. Amidst slavery Patrick Henry thundered, "Give me liberty or give me death!" And Washington and Jefferson were of Virginia. The South waged a war in accordance with the law of civilized nations, and Grant, the general of the armies of the United States, ever acted as an honorable foe, and endeared himself to the whole South by his magnanimous treatment to the chivalrous, peerless Lee.

The war was ended. I cannot say peace was restored, for reconstruction had to play its part, and Goldsboro came through her travail, but not the Goldsboro of the past. But her people had the same heroic resolve. They did not sit down and weep and repine over the past—it was gone. They grasped the present and looked hopefully to the future. While they revered the past, they had the wisdom to know that nothing would be gained by dwelling upon what had been. They were equal to the task that confronted them and drove the horrid specter of despair from before their eyes, and united with a determination to make their town greater than ever. And well have they succeeded, far beyond the imagination of any of that day. From a population of hardly 1,000 we have grown to 10,000 of industrious, sober and intelligent people, and the god of fortune has been lavish to us with his gifts. On every side—north, south, east and west—the ear is greeted by the hum of machinery, and the products of her factories are sent in all directions. Her cotton factories spin the fleecy staple into yarns that are made into cloth for the clothing of the nations. Her lumber plants furnish the material for housing thousands. Her furniture factories give the necessaries for the comfort and beautifying of their homes.

Her agricultural works give the husbandman implements to cultivate the crops and cause two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before, aided by the fertilizers which are manufactured at her oil mills, and her machine shops keep all in repair, and her rice mills giving the food for many, all working together for material advancement and all interests interlaced. So far as we have noted, the material progress of Goldsboro has made grand strides in every direction. She has not been forgetful of the higher duties. Look at the graded school, the pride of the city. Her people have ever believed in education, and before, during and after the war the schoolmaster was ever in her midst—McLeod, Cowan, Miss Whitaker, Miss Wills, Robinson, Evans, Dale, Cobb, Gulick, Movelle, Brent and Closs before 1861, and the number since are too numerous to mention. Our graded schools are doing all that is possible to give all an equal chance for the future, and her alumni are filling positions of trust and profit in many of the avenues of business. Goldsboro holds out a welcome to all who may come to cast their lot with us, so that they be honest and true. Her lawyers are well versed in legal lore and will uphold the rights of all, and she counts among her honored citizens a statesman whose worth is recognized abroad as an orator and patriot. He is the peer of any, and will yet write his name still higher in the niche of fame. Her physicians are skilled and learned, and will do all that any can to drive the ills of the flesh away. And her merchants—none are better. All kinds of merchandise are ever on sale, and many have been continuously in business here for many years. One firm, H. Weil & Bros., opened in 1865. They are men of integrity and have done much for the city of their adoption. Their financial standing is of the highest, and the name of "honest merchandise" (a motto emblazoned on their delivery wagon) is a household word for miles around. Many more of our merchants are great factors in the development of the city, and would be mentioned, but space forbids. Goldsboro has two banks that are ever ready and willing to aid any enterprise that merits assistance. They are ably and conservatively managed—the Bank of Wayne, E. B. Borden president, and the National Bank of Goldsboro, G. A. Norwood, Jr., president—and no banks anywhere are more solvent.

So we have reviewed Goldsboro in the past and the present, and Goldsboro of the future will loom up grander, greater and better in many ways, and, in the words of our worthy daily, Argus, "We go forward." Her railroads will afford the transportation and her factories will give employment. The following pages will give the names of all the people.

To make a happy fireside clime
To weans and wife—
That is the true pathos and sublime
Of human life.
